On February 10, 1986, the author and David Curnock, both of Ecology and Environment, Inc. (E & E) met with Mr. Jim Hart of the Hillsboro City Water Department. The reason for this meeting was to gather background information about the water supply in the Hillsboro area which can be used to evaluate the danger the above site posed to the immediate population.

Mr. Hart explained that the City of Hillsboro obtains their municipal supply from two intakes: one located at the north end of Lake Hillsboro and the other from the South end of Glenn Shoals Lake. Both of these lakes are formed by damming creeks in the area.

The towns of Taylor Springs and Schram City, both of which border Hillsboro, purchase water from Hillsboro. Mr. Hart stated for all practical purposes, all people located within the limits of these three towns are hooked-up to municipal supply.

Mr. Hart then marked the locations of the intakes, plus two small areas which utilize private wells, on a city map. This information will be transferred to a topo map of the area to assess the population which could be potentially affected.
